

IRANIAN CHARACTER OF THE ARMENIAN LANGUAGE

“Müller's view, that Armenian is Iranian, has not been disproved, and must be designated as the best established and the prevailing one at present.” Dr. Heinrich Hubschmann

Xenophon, an ancient Greek general serving in some of the Persian expeditions, describes many aspects of Armenian village life and hospitality. He relates that the people spoke a language that to his ear sounded like the language of the Persians. (Xenophon. Anabasis. pp. IV.v.2–9.)

Eminent scholars of the Armenian language such as the former chair of the Linguistics Department at University of Texas, the late Dr. Winfred Lehman concede that Armenian may be an Iranian subgroup language. Moreover, obvious similarities in vocabulary and structure between the languages are well known to bilingual speakers of Persian and Armenian. This is a small sample word list intended to demonstrate the depth of similarity in even the oldest, most core and basic Persian and Armenian words which cannot necessarily be categorized as “loan words.” In some cases, certain derivative words are listed. In most cases, derivative words are not listed, as a complete listing of derivative words would number in the several thousands. This is a relatively random sample. I refer you to the following essay by the linguist Heinrich Hubschmann, ON THE POSITION OF ARMENIAN IN THE SPHERE OF THE INDO-EUROPEAN LANGUAGES <http://www.utexas.edu/cola/centers/lrc/books/read12.html>.

It is an extensive discussion of this very issue. Though ultimately Dr. Hubschmann’s findings as to the Iranian character of the Armenian language are inconclusive, Hubschmann states unequivocally: “Müller's view, that Armenian is Iranian, has not been disproved, and must be designated as the best established and the prevailing one at present.”

Almost all Armenian surnames contain this suffix. the "ian" suffix is the plural form of the "i" suffix in Persian meaning "having the qualities of" or "belonging to". The Iranian "-an" ending for pluralization is comparable to "ner" ending for pluralization in Armenian.

II. Prefixes and Suffixes

Persian prefixes and suffixes, from which thousands of derivative words and terms are constructed, are ubiquitous in Armenian. The following suffixes are of Iranian origin:

1. -astan in nouns denoting places, especially in names of countries: aspastan “stable of horses” (from morphology asp “horse”); darastan “garden” (from dar “tree”); Hayastan “Armenia” (from Hay “Armenian”);
2. -aran in nouns denoting places: ganjaran “treasury” (from ganj “treasure”); from old Persian dāna- “receptacle,” cf. Parthian -arān
3. -arêh in adjectives and adverbs denoting languages: yonarêh “Greek” asorarêh “Syriac” (from Asori), etc. from Old Persian -ādayana- “manner, way,” Persian. āyīn “norm, custom”
4. -kar “doing, making:”); vnasakar “hurtful” (from vnas “damage”), etc.; from Persian. kar / -gar/-gāar (to work)
5. -kert “made, done”: dastakert “building, village” (lit. “handmade” from dast “hand”); place name Tigranakert (lit. “founded by Tigran”), etc.; from Old Persian -kṛta “made, done,” Middle Persian -kirt, -gird, Modern Persian “kardan” (to do).
6. -ooo(r)hi in feminines, starting from a single loanword, ṭag-ooo(r)hi “queen” from old Persian. *tāga-br̥θryā (feminine to ṭagavor “king,” literally Persian “bearing the crown”)
7. -pan “protecting”: marzpan “margrave, protecting the frontiers” (from marz “frontier”); barapan/darapan “doorkeeper” etc.; from Persian. -pān, -bān,
8. -pet “chief,” first in numerous titles borrowed from Persian. (sparapet “army leader,” dprapet “secretary-in-chief”, etc from Persian. -pet- “lord, chief.” The extremely large number of these formations is clear evidence of the profound influence of the Ashkanian and Sasanian feudal aristocracy and military on Armenia.
9. džh- or ṭsh- “dis-, mis-, un-” from Persian. dsh-.
10. ham- “same/together” from Iranian *hame-: Armenian words: hampuyr (kiss), hamamayr (of the same mother), hamalsaran (university) etc.

11. -ak/ik in diminutives (from substantives or adjectives): navak “boat” from nav “ship;” kapoyt-ak “bluish” from kapoyt “blue;” from Middle Persian -ak, -ag;

12. -akan in adjectives (“belonging to”): aškharhakan “worldly” from aškharh “world;” vazharakan “merchant” from vazhar “trade, commerce;” from Iranian -akāna-, -akān-, -agān-. This is one of the most common Armenian suffixes.
